

PROJECT 4: PRINT & DIGITAL ZINE (200 PTS)

For Project 4, you will create a zine¹ in two formats on a topic of your choice. Zines, short for magazines, are self-distributed publications on a wide range of topics, from social and political issues (reproductive rights, advocacy, and mutual aid) to special interests (gaming, fanfiction, and hobbies) to art and creative writing.

Although the content will be the same across both versions, you will create a physical version (with paper, photocopied or collaged elements, and hand lettering) and a digital version using InDesign. Like previous projects, you will consider typography, page layout, and design principles. This final project introduces theories of embodied design and typography as rhetorical, expressive, and laden with meaning. Specifically, you will engage the rhetorical dimensions of typography: how type expresses identity, builds ethos and credibility, and appeals emotionally to readers.

In addition to submitting your materials on Canvas, we will hold a zine fest at the end of the semester where you showcase and sell your zines!

SUBMISSION DETAILS ✨

1. Print Zine (Paper). Zines were created for easy print distribution, and people still make lo-fi zines with paper, pens, markers, magazine clippings, glue, scissors, and staplers. The zines are then photocopied or scanned, printed, and folded. You MUST create a physical version of this zine, which you will scan. You can likely do this with your phone. Your zine must be at least eight pages (including a cover page and an introduction), no more than sixteen.² (75 pts)

Deliverable: print zine, scanned (.pdf or .jpeg)

2. Digital Zine (InDesign). For the digital translation of your zine, you will use InDesign and Photoshop to make more comprehensive design choices in terms of page design, typography, and color. You will build on your previous InDesign skills to produce a multi-page document. For this version, we will discuss how to create accessible PDFs: adding alt text to images, applying paragraph styles, and setting the reading order for content and design elements. (100 pts)

Deliverable: digital zine (.pdf)

3. Reflection. You will also submit a 1–2-page, single-spaced memo that provides an overview of your rhetorical design choices, then a more specific discussion of how

¹ There are many zine formats, e.g., traditional 8 panel, accordion, handsewn, stacked, and stapled booklet. We will look at multiple examples of these in class.

² The page requirement applies to both the print and digital zine. Your total page count should be divisible by four (8, 12, or 16) for easy printing.

these choices were informed by the readings and your imagined audience. There are two specific things I'd like you to consider: How does the ethos of your design differ between the print and digital formats? How were your content and design choices informed by your imagined audience? Like previous projects, you are also welcome to reflect on challenges and/or choices that you're proud of. (20 pts)

Deliverables: 1-page reflective memo

DEADLINES ✨

Project 4 is due to Canvas by 12pm on Friday, December 13th.

You will submit a draft of your print zine for feedback on Friday, November 15th, and we will workshop drafts in class. You will finalize your print zine for feedback and submit it to Canvas on Monday, November 18th. Although your zine should be complete, you will have time to make revisions before the final submission.

You will submit a rough draft of your digital zine on Wednesday, December 4th, and we will workshop drafts in class.

We will hold a zine fest on the final day of class: Monday, December 9th.

ZINE FEST ✨

For the zine fest, you can choose what version of your zine you want to share. You will need to print at least five copies of one of your zines. If you want to print copies of both or also offer access to a digital version, you're welcome to do so.

In addition to printing five copies, you will make a table sign with your name, the title and price of your zine, information about payment options, and a QR code to scan. There will be more information about the logistics of the zine fest on Canvas.

We will collaborate on an event flyer and begin advertising the event a couple weeks in advance. Feel free to invite your friends!

EVALUATION CRITERIA ✨

Project 4 is worth 200 points: 75 points for the print zine, 100 points for the digital zine, and 25 points for the reflection. Like Project 3, I will be assessing both the content and design of your zines, although I will mainly focus on design.

Print zines will be assessed holistically, based on the following criteria:

Content (25 pts)

- descriptive title

- clear and concise introduction that states the zine’s purpose and imagined audience(s)
- content that is logically organized and appropriate for the audience
- references for any quoted, paraphrased, or summarized content

Design (50 pts)

- effective use of the page
- thoughtful application of design principles
 - strong type and color contrast
 - consistent use of design elements
 - purposeful alignment
 - adequate white space
- purposeful combination of handmade/DIY elements: collaged photos, hand lettering/handwritten fonts, etc.
- overall readability and accessibility

Digital zines will be assessed holistically, based on the following criteria:

Content (25 pts)

- descriptive title
- clear and concise introduction that states the zine’s purpose and imagined audience(s)
- content that is logically organized and appropriate for the audience
- references for any quoted, paraphrased, or summarized content

Design (75 pts)

- effective use of the page
- at least one spread where design elements span across the left and right pages
- thoughtful application of design principles
 - strong type and color contrast
 - consistent use of design elements
 - purposeful alignment and use of the grid
 - adequate white space
- purposeful selection of visual elements (images, icons, etc.) that complement the zine’s topic
- overall readability
- accessibility: alt text, paragraph styles, and defined reading order

Reflections will also be assessed holistically, based on the following criteria:

- overview of rhetorical design choices
- specific discussion of the reading(s) and theories that informed your choices for both the print and digital zine
- adherence to memo formatting
